

SOCIAL and PERSONAL

M. R. AND MRS. FREDERICK PALEN, of Newport News, entertained at cards Saturday evening last in honor of Mrs. Mayo, of Richmond. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Parker, Mr. and Mrs. Winston Read, Mr. and Mrs. John Randall, Mr. and Mrs. Almon F. Bowen, Mr. and Mrs. Benson, Mrs. W. R. Aylett, Mr. and Mrs. Horace Avery, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bartlett, Mr. Alexander Weaver and Mr. Manville.

Mrs. Palen was formerly Miss Lina Mayo, the daughter of Mrs. George W. Mayo, of Richmond.

Mrs. Brawley Honored.
Mrs. William Henry Brawley, wife of Judge Brawley, of Charleston, S. C., who is spending some time with her husband at the Jefferson Hotel, was given an elegant luncheon on Wednesday of this week by Mrs. Thomas M. Brawley, of No. 112 East Grace Street. A number of representative society women were invited to meet Mrs. Brawley, covers being laid for sixteen.

Mothers' Club Social.
The ladies of Central School Mothers' Club extend a cordial invitation to the patrons of that school to the School Board, to members of other mothers' clubs, and all persons interested, to the first social given by this club Friday evening, December 11th, at 8:15 o'clock, in Central School.

Admiral Webster has kindly consented to lecture on an interesting subject. The music for the evening will be furnished by the West End Angels. Refreshments will be served and no admission charged.

Announcements.
At a bridge party given Saturday last, by the Misses Short, of Westonsalem, N. C., the engagement of their sister, Elise, to Mr. James Bear, of Roanoke, Va., was announced, the marriage to take place early in the new year.

Powell-Jones.
Mr. and Mrs. O. L. Jones announce the approaching marriage of their daughter, Harriet Estelle, to Mr. Harry Bryan Powell, of Dumbarton. The ceremony will be performed at 9 o'clock on the morning of December 16th, in Bethlehem Baptist Church, the Rev. J. O. Kirk, D. D., officiating.

Chapter Regent.
Mrs. William M. Strother has been appointed regent of a new chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, to be organized by her in Lynchburg and named in honor of its home city, Lynchburg.

Godwin-Fentress.
The wedding of Miss Mary Elizabeth Fentress to Mr. Walter E. Godwin, of Everett, Va., was celebrated Wednesday afternoon in the home of Mrs. Charles Hoge, of Forty-eighth Street, Newport News, the Rev. E. T. Dabman, of Trinity Methodist Church, officiating. Miss Beattie Hoge played the wedding march. The bride was gowned in brown broadcloth, with hat and gloves to match, and carried Bride roses. Mrs. R. W. Godwin was matron of honor and Mr. S. W. Godwin, brother of the groom, best man.

Ye Deestrick Skule.
The members of the Loving Circle of King's Daughters, of which Mrs. T. William Pemberton is leader, will give "Ye Deestrick Skule of ye Olden Time" in the auditorium of the Jefferson Hotel to-night, with a number of special feature attractions enlivening the program. A burlesque on "The Merry Widow" will be given by Mr. William Glegg, who will sing several selections from the opera.

Board Meeting.
The members composing the City Mission Board will hold an important meeting at 11 o'clock this morning in the Woman's Christian Association auditorium, 707 East Franklin Street. All members are asked to be present.

Annual Meeting.
The annual business meeting of the Emma Andrews Whist Club will be held this afternoon at 416 West Grace Street, and all members are requested to be present.

Personal Mention.
Mrs. George W. Bagby and Miss Ellen Bagby have returned from a trip

Kaufmann & Co.

An Early Clean-Up Sale of High-Grade

Women's Costumes

This should certainly come as a great, gratifying surprise to those women who have been expecting it to come several weeks later. And as we don't believe in doing a thing half-heartedly we will sell them at prices that will induce the most economical.

Beautiful Satin Evening Gowns, previously sold for $35 Now $25.00

Handsome Satin Directoire Costumes, previously sold at $50 Now $29.50

Elegant Broadcloth Costume, suitable for afternoon dress, $35 Now $25.00

Chapman-Alexander Campaign.

Important Notice to Singers.

A large chorus choir of not less than 1200 voices is being formed for the Evangelistic Services at the Auditorium (January 5-21). All singers, whether choir members or not, who desire to take part should send their names and addresses immediately to Rev. Thomas Semmes, City Chairman, Chapman-Alexander Headquarters, Central Y. M. C. A., Sixth and Main Streets, stating the part sung and the nights that can be given each week. Male voices and altos especially desired.

abroad, and are with Mrs. C. E. Bolling at 302 West Grace Street.
Mrs. D. M. Lee and daughter, Miss Mary Custis Lee, and Miss Flora Mason, daughter of Judge J. E. Mason, of Fredericksburg, who have been spending a month in Cuba, have sailed on their homeward trip.
Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Crookford have returned from a visit to friends in Staunton.

Miss Eleanor Heath Jones, of this city, is the guest of her grandparents at the University of Virginia.

Miss Sally Goodwin of Clifton Forge, who has been visiting her aunt, Mrs. W. W. Boxley, in Roanoke, will be the guest of Mrs. Seddon Boxley, in Lynchburg, before returning to Clifton Forge.

Mr. James I. Fritchett, Jr., is a member of a hunting party which includes Colonel G. A. Tenny and Dr. S. R. Upham, of Claremont, N. H., guests of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. James I. Fritchett, Sr., of Danville. The party is being entertained by Mr. R. A. James at his country home in Henry county.

Miss Lilly C. Jones, who has been the guest of her sister, Mrs. W. H. Campbell, in Richmond, has returned to Charlottesville.

Mrs. W. W. Boxley, who has been the guest of her sister, Mrs. Everett Wadley, in Richmond, has returned to Roanoke.

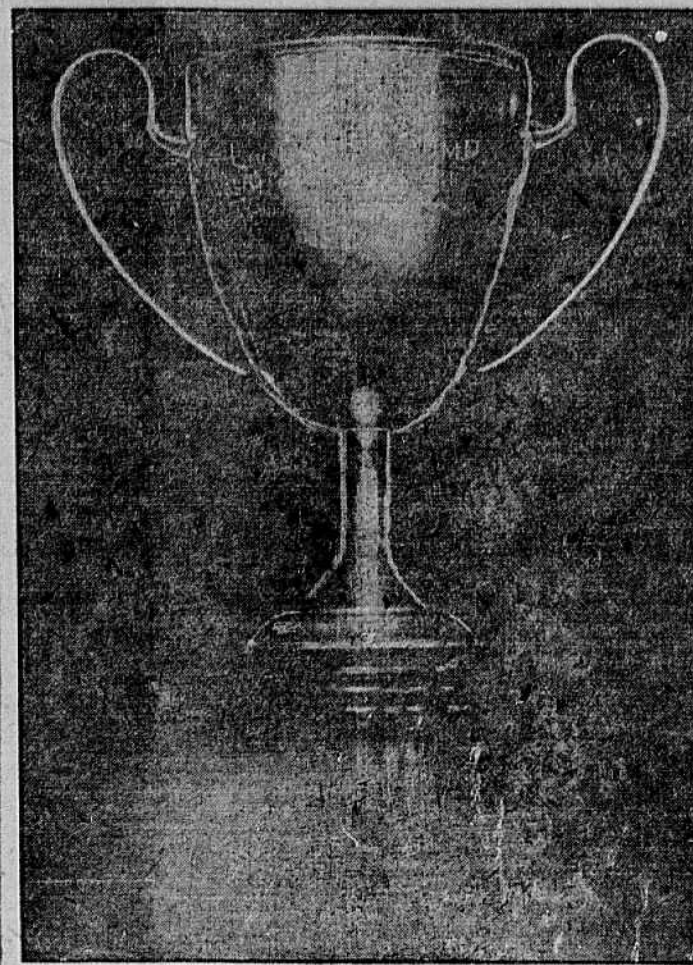

Miss Annabel Barksdale is visiting in the home of Mr. J. E. Turner, of Staunton.

Friends of Mrs. William Munford Ellis, of Shawville, Va., who is at the Memorial Hospital, will be pleased to hear that she is doing well. Miss Ellis, of New York, is with her mother at the hospital.

Miss Betty Dickinson, of Hollins, Va., who spent several days this week in Richmond with her sister, has returned to Hollins.

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Powers will entertain in their home on Tuesday, December 16th, in honor of their daughter, Miss Sarah Lindsay Powers, and niece, Miss Dudley Powers.

LOVING CUP TO PRESIDENT

Loving cup presented to Dr. Lucien Lofton, president, by Times-Dispatch Correspondents' Association.

nial days, future historians will write this down as the most splendidly emphasized period of her history. It blended the highest virtues of the warrior and the highest virtue of the Christian gentleman.

"Now I had wished that my friend, Colonel A. B. Williams—why he is colonel I do not know—had preceded me. I tried to arrange it with the toastmaster, but he would not agree to it for some reason. But I am a newspaper man, too, and don't you forget it. Forty years ago I was editor of the Winchester Times, which was the thunder of the lower Valley, and I am now the editor of the Confederate Column of the Times-Dispatch. Therefore I am one of you. I suppose I may call myself an ex officio member of this association."

Major Hunter was lavish in his compliments to the woman contingent of the organization, and when he concluded there was much cheering.

Mr. Williams was presented as "another veteran of that great struggle," which good-natured characterization of the editor of the News Leader created much laughter. He, too, was happy and humorous in his remarks. He said these people had been brought here to be entertained and not to be punished, and he therefore would not inflict a lengthy speech upon them.

"My friend, Major Hunter, says I am a colonel, though he doesn't know why," he continued. "Major Hunter is an editor, and I may say I don't know why. I notice that as soon as he took charge of the Confederate Column of the Times-Dispatch it was put on the funny page. I believe he has succeeded in getting for it a better location, but I don't know how long it will remain in its present position."

After a brief speech by Mr. M. P. Dahlborn, the correspondent from Burkeville, the party at 12:30 A. M. dispersed.

THOS. N. PAGE ON NEWSPAPER WORK

Unable to be present at the banquet last night, Thomas Nelson Page sent the following letter to the editor of the Times-Dispatch, which was read to the correspondents:

"I beg to assure you of my sense of the great honor you have done me in asking me to speak at the banquet of the Southern newspaper men, and of my sincere regret that an appointment of some weeks' standing prevents my accepting it. Quite apart from the pleasure of meeting these gentlemen, the privilege of doing so, and thus of getting in personal touch with them, is one which I have long coveted, and I avail myself of your request to give an expression of my views on this occasion. I feel that, if I am not too bold in claiming it, we belong to the same profession. My conception of a man of letters is that he is one who portrays life as it is through a medium of art which carries truth on its face, and by appealing to the higher sense makes for righteousness. The novelist, the essayist, the historian, can, even under the proper inspiration, appeal only to the limited circle which he can reach through his individual efforts. Such writers stand alone and want the power that comes from association. The poet, of course, appeals to all mankind, or he is not a poet, however skillful a versifier he may be. Thus, all poets are brothers, even though one may play the other, as Cain slew Abel.

"The class of literary men who make their appeal through the public press have the inestimable advantage of forming an association which has for its field every part of the country and reaches every element in that field. They have the privilege of dealing alike with the burning questions of the day and with those questions whose survival through the years proves that they are eternal. Possibly it is because of this that many of the greatest writers of England, of France and of America have at one time or another served their novitiate either on the daily or the periodical press. It would exhaust your patience to go into this at length, but any roster of men of letters of the last hundred years will show that the large majority of those who were attainted by the highest eminence have been at some time regular writers for the press.

Editorial Work Important Now.
"With this high privilege of the editor's profession comes a corresponding responsibility. Noblesse oblige is a principle of life which cannot be traded or shirked, and it is of this responsibility that, availing myself of your request, I wish to say a brief word. Never in any time or in any land has the function of the editorial conduct of the daily and weekly press been so important as at present in this country of ours.

"The question which I desire to put to your convocation is whether they realize fully their power and whether they exercise it in the highest manner. Time was when the editorial page of certain papers in the South carried a weight which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to bitter personal animosities, and opponents, the sanctities of private life were universally held inviolate, and there was no page printed within the limits of the country which might not have been read in the presence of a knight with a sword which shaped and directed the policy of great parties, and thus of the entire country. While at that time, in the excitement of party contests, the presentation and discussion of party principles led to